What is your business actually worth? You know what your house is worth. You know what your vehicles are worth. You probably know the balance of your investment accounts. But do you know what your business is worth? For many business owners, their company is the largest asset they own—and yet it's often the one asset they understand the value of the least. Knowing your number isn't just about selling. It's about understanding what you've built, what's driving its value, where the risks are, and what you can do today to make it worth more tomorrow. Join Briana Berg, CV A, CEPA, of North Kendrick Advisors for a practical, candid conversation about how privately held businesses are valued—and what actually makes one business more valuable than another.
